Reported: 04/14/2019.  Melanie (VI) called 911 and said that the OF hit her while they were in her house. She left in her car and called from a nearby location. I arrived and spoke with her. She said that she came home from work and the OF, who she said is her ex-boyfriend, was drunk, asked her where she'd been, then grabbed and pulled both her arm and her shirt and pushed her. She then left and called 911. Melanie said the OF has been staying with her for about three weeks and refuses to leave. She had no visible signs of injury resulting from this incident, but she did have several bruises that she said were a result of an incident that occurred on Friday at the same address. On that occasion, she said that the OF became angry when she refused to give him a ride. She said the OF then choked her, grabbed her by the arm, knocked her down, and dragged her. She said the police were called and nothing could be done because she had no visible signs of injury at that time.  Melanie did have pronounced bruises on her arms and legs and also had a less noticeable bruise on the left side of her neck as a result of the previous incident. I advised Melanie to consider getting a protective order and also advised her to stay with a friend until she could apply for the order Monday morning.  We went back to Melanie's house so she could pack some belongings and the OF was sleeping in a bedroom. Melanie then gathered her things and left to go stay with a friend.
