	Officer was working off-duty, in full uniform, at Dillard`s and called for a car. I arrived at Dillard`s and spoke with the officer, who already had a female in custody. He stated he saw the female holding her arm in an unusual matter, as he got closer, he saw that she had a shirt stuffed in the sleeve of her jacket. The suspect stated that she was trying the shirt on and it must have got stuck in her sleeve. The officer then noticed that the shirt had no tag on it and she admitted that she ripped the tag off and was not going to pay for the item.
	The officer searched her for other stolen merchandise, and felt two pair of pants. He asked if she was wearing two pairs of pants and she stated she was not. She then told the officer that she forgot she had tights on under her pants. A female manager, who was assisting the officer, saw the pattern on the waist and stated that those pants (under the others) belonged to the store. The suspect then stated that manager was correct they were not her tights, but pants that belonged to the store. She stated she was going to pay for them later and that she forgot she had them on. It was found that the pants also had the tags removed. A third tag was found on the floor and the suspect stated that she had ripped the tags off three items but put one back on the shelf. The total value for both items was 60 dollars and both items were recovered. I cited the suspect for shoplifting and she was barred from
