Reported: 10/17/2019.  I was working off-duty at Deaconess Hospital. Medical staff called the me for assistance with a patient. When I went back to the room, the patient was being held down by several members of the nursing staff. He was flailing and bucking to try and get them off. I used force to get him under control while they attempted to put restraints on. While grabbing his arm, he grabbed my hand to try and get out of my grasp. During this process he began jerking his legs and kicking at the nurses while they tried to put his restraints on his legs. I told the male that if he kicked at a nurse one more time I would tase him. He stated he understood and calmed down. He then started spitting and he then kicked his legs again while the nurses tried to finish attaching the restraints. Force was used to get him under control for the safety of the medical staff and so that they could perform the duties they needed to.		VANCLEAVE, J.
