Reported: 04/10/2020. No victims listed. The RP states that he and the IO are still married, but filing for a divorce. The RP and IO have a verbal agreement that established parenting times between the two, involving their two children in common. Today, the IO was supposed to have dropped the children off at his apartment at 1800 hrs., but has failed to do so. The RP has tried calling the IO, but is unable to get an answer. The RP advises that this is a common occurrence and is tired of the IO's games. I instructed the RP to acquire an attorney and get a court order that would legally establish parenting times. Since he does not currently have that, there isn't much we could do with just a verbal agreement between them. I explained once he had a court order, he could then file for a custody interference report and the judge could take action if the IO violated it. The RP agreed and asked for an incident report showing that the IO has failed to drop off his children.	PYLANT, R. E.
