Reported: 08/24/2021. Officers were dispatched to a family dispute. The male (problem party) was barred from the property and was extremely loud. The male was asked multiple times to lower his voice, but the male continued to yell at 0140 hours. The male awoke a neighbor in the same complex of the original dispatched address. The female stated she heard the male yelling and came out of her apartment to see what was going on. The male could be heard from more than five two hundred feet away. Officers attempted to get the male medical help, after he requested AMR. The male refused to actually tell AMR what was going on and continued to get louder and louder over his property still being inside the home. Officers explained to the male that they were told his stuff was not in the home and it was a civil matter. After much time, officers were able to locate a bag the male hid under a couch with his medication. The male was told the rest of his property would have to be picked up at another time or he could take the other party to civil court. The male did not like the answer. Officers gave commands for the male to exit the ambulance where he was placed in handcuffs; after it was determined he would not be going to the hospital. The male was booked in on disorderly conduct.	FAHSE, A. G.
